The Rendezvous

We will meet again when hair is grey but eyes still glow with the passions of life.

We will meet again when bodies are frail having carried the weight of living in sadness and grief, but feet still glide with the memories of romance, laughter and love.

We will meet again as in our first blush of youth, beneath the shade of the old olive tree where we danced in the shadow of its leaves, or upon the ancient bridge where first we kissed and whispered sweet love promises to the heart.

We will meet again in the twilight of our rest as precious echoes of past walk side by side, awakened amidst the fragrance of this enchanted land.

And here we stand, you and I remain the same, long faded but reunited, an everlasting flame.
